Inference answers.

1. The people that run the hotels want their guests to have a unique experience, as they 'go the extra mile'.
2. Ice hotels might seem impractical because:
  - The ice is cold and wet
  - Ice melts and 'disintegrates' in the sun.
3. (Answers may vary) Johanna Burgess feels that ice hotels are a good thing as she states that 'some of their apparent disadvantages are actually key to their popularity'.
4. It suggests that only a few artists work on each hotel when it states 'hundreds of artists apply every year to create these magical masterpieces, but the vast majority are rejected'.
5. Carrie Tollington enjoys staying in ice hotels because;
  - She thinks it's a unique experience
  - There's lots of different things to do
6. Carrie Tollington is from Essex - Fact
Staying in ice hotels is a fun experience - Opinion
You can try skiing at many ice hotels - Fact
Outdoor winter pursuits are boring - Opinion
7. A sauna or a hot tub might be a welcome relief because the hotels are made of ice, therefore it is likely to be very cold. A sauna and hot tub would be a chance for the hotel's guests to warm up.
8. By the end of the article I think that the reporter feels that ice hotels are a good idea. I think this as he describes them as 'a fantastic escape for everyone' and a 'unique adventure'.
